

Doctoral Colloquium

If you are a doctoral student, who is currently working on a thesis on any aspect of equality, diversity and inclusion at work, this is a good place for your presentation. The purpose of the doctoral colloquium is to encourage doctoral students to present their work in a constructive environment and share their experiences of doing research in the field of equality, diversity and inclusion at work. The colloquium will be open to students at any level of study. The sessions will be open to all participants of the conference and plenty of feedback will be provided.

The papers should reflect your doctoral projects. We would encourage you to write papers which summarise your doctoral project in terms of: 1) key literature (main paradigms, conceptual frames, issues and theoretical argument); 2) methodological; 3) preliminary findings and 4) the original contribution (expected or real) of the thesis. You are invited to forward an abstract of your paper of 250 to 300 words (excluding references) to Joana Vassilopoulou (j.vassilopoulou@uea.ac.uk) and Dorota Bourne (d.bourne@qmul.ac.uk).

If selected, you will be invited to present your doctoral research, in a session lasting not longer than 20 minutes, including questions and answers. Selected papers and abstracts will be presented in the conference web site.
